

Rebuttal to argument in favor of Measure E

We can solve our most pressing challenges through collaboration, not with risky, never-tried measures that can't be altered when unintended problems arise.

Measure E:

- doesn't automatically exempt non-profits or many smaller and mid-sized businesses;
- makes no routine allowance for seasonal or event-based businesses that uniquely depend on part-time workers; and,
- Invites an outpouring of nuisance lawsuits by interest groups and lawyers against responsible employers who cannot afford the cost of litigation.

Measure E's red tape and risk of lawsuits prompted one high-tech employer to say its passage would cause them to reconsider their plans to move 1,000 good-paying jobs to San Jose.

Measure E has never been tried anywhere else in the United States, yet it prohibits City leaders from making even minor changes that would narrow its scope or soften its impact. That's why the San Jose City Council rejected this unsound approach.

Instead of a rigid, take-it-or-leave-it approach, we could better provide more hours for part-time workers by working with businesses, non-profits and community groups to solve the problem. By working together, City leaders can craft common-sense ordinances that don't harm responsible, well-intentioned businesses and non-profits that are our engines of job creation.

No after-school program should have to risk a Measure E-inspired lawsuit just to add more part-time tutors.

Give San Jose the chance to do this the right way. Vote no on Measure E.
