Mr. Huynh,

In this case, San Jose election law differs from State law. Candidates running for San Jose city office have to report the name, address, occupation and employer of all contributors, even those who contribute less than $100. (see SJMC 12.06.235.)

Subject: Question

Dear City of San Jose Officials,

My name is Michael Huynh, a student at San Jose State. I am doing a report about financials in political campaigns and I had a question regarding local city policy.

I know for state/fppc law that campaign contributions higher than $100 must be reported on campaign contribution reports with the contributor's name and employer. However, I was wondering do contributions for $99 or less has to be reported/show on campaign reports with name and employer?

For state law, it says candidates do not, but I was wondering if City of San Jose Election policy is the same or differs from the state?

Thank you so much,
Michael
