TO:

The City of San Jose is working with Page & Turnbull, an architecture, design, planning, and preservation firm, on an exciting new project: Martha Gardens Historic Resources Survey!

The goal of the Martha Gardens Historic Resources Survey is to identify potential historical resources in the Martha Garden Specific Plan (MGSP) area. The survey project will help to determine which properties are historically significant and should be protected and which properties would not require any additional historic resource evaluation when development is proposed.

The project will be kicked off with a virtual community meeting on September 29th and community input will be received through December 2022. We want to learn about Martha Gardens' stories as told by the residents of the community!

The purpose of this first community meeting is to:

- introduce the project
- identify community members that would like to talk to City staff and/or Page & Turnbull about historically significant people and events in the Martha Gardens area; and
- identify buildings, objects, features, places, landscapes that represent the stories of the community.

What is a historic resources survey?

A process of identifying and gathering information on a community's historic buildings and a fundamental tool for making informed planning decisions.

The Martha Gardens Historic Resources Survey includes two things:

- reconnaissance-level survey; and
- intensive-level survey.

Two types of surveys:

A reconnaissance-level survey gathers basic information about the physical qualities of buildings in a study area. It involves walking around the area, photographing the buildings and noting observations about architectural styles, building features and materials as seen from the street.

An intensive-level survey adds more property-specific historical data. Detailed research is conducted to reveal information about significant persons or historical events associated with the recorded properties which are then evaluated for eligibility for listing on a local, state or national register.

Please contact Dana Peak Edwards, Historic Preservation Officer at (408) 534-2990 or dana.peak@sanjoseca.gov with questions about the project or community meeting.
